example.

"I'm not the first artist to paint on French roof tiles, but they call out to me," Downing said. "They're appealing and they take paint well. It refreshes me for easel painting."

Another work got its name, "As Ever Was," from a friend in Kentucky who described someone as "the nicest man as ever was."

"I like to hear the sounds of Kentucky ... the accent," Downing said.

But the small phrase titles a large piece. The canvas used for "As Ever Was" was so large that Downing had to have a wall knocked out so it would fit in his studio.

"It let some light in," he said. "(The painting) was a physical feat to pull off."

Even the tall wooden stem that centers the piece "Herald, Speak of the Days" has reason behind it.

"It was part of a Christmas tree in Menerbes (France)," Downing said.

Such details don't sound like they come from a man who didn't aspire to be an artist as a child growing up in Horse Cave.

"I didn't know painters existed," Downing said. "We had two framed objects on the wall. I had no way to connect them to the living person who executed them."

It wasn't until he went to Chicago to study optometry that he found his true calling.

"I went to the Art Institute and felt like my life was beginning in a whole new way," he said. "I knew right away that I wanted to paint. I felt like I'd been waiting all my life."

Downing continued to take optometry classes while taking art classes at the Art Institute on nights and weekends. But after completing his optometry course in 1950, he moved to Paris and established his art career.

Now, despite decades of living in France, Downing has not forgotten his roots. He said his home city of Menerbes, France, is similar to Horse Cave.

"It's a farming population of 1,000 people," he said. "I never did not feel at home" in Menerbes.

The exhibit "Joe Dudley Downing 2000" will be displayed through July 23 at The Kentucky Museum. Admission is $2 for adults, $1 for children and free for children under 8. Sunday admission is free. Museum hours are from 9 30 a.m. to 4 p.m. each Tuesday through Saturday and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. each Sunday. Reservations are required for group tours. For more details, contact the museum.

UNCOVERING THE MYSTERIES OF MUSIC

BY KIMBERLY SHAIN

When they aren't teaching, most professors in the Western Kentucky University Department of Music spend their time rehearsing or performing. Stages, recital rooms and performance halls become their second homes. They live in the spotlight; however there is one notable exception. Dr. Mary Wolinski doesn't perform in front of a packed house, nor is she the master of an instrument. Her recital room is the library. The past is her stage.

Wolinski is a music historian.

"I'm a medievalist," she said, "so what I'm interested in is 13th century music."

She is the 1999 recipient of the Library Faculty Award, given to a faculty member who has contributed constantly and notably to the development of university libraries.

In 1993 Wolinski received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities which allowed her to spend a year in France researching the origins of a manuscript. This manuscript, dating to the mid-13th century contains an early form of polyphonic music, or music for two or more voices. She traced this early form of music from France to Belgium, Scotland, Italy Spain and Poland.

"During this period, there were many innovations in rhythm," she said. "Musicians were just starting to write down rhythmic notations. I find that very interesting because it's the beginning of something that's very distinctive in Western music, which is rhythm."

Wolinski said this early form of polyphonic music is the predecessor to later works of importance like the madrigals and Bach's motets. She said the composer's ability to control rhythm, and have different tones sounding at the same time was an im-

Some of the manuscript is dedicated to St. James. This led her to research kinds of chants that would be sung on St. James Feast. Wolinski said the mass of St. James is a consummate collection and a consummate collection. Kelsey Professor of music Wolinski. "She has given us since the moment she stepped board with us."
